Abstract

Progressivism is regarded as an approach aiming at social reform and keeping up with rapid change of society. Progress can be achieved through reform in all areas, particularly in the social, political and economic fields. In this case, it is essential to ensure society's progress by transforming the structures and barriers like tradition and social pressure through education. This qualitative study deals with progressivism as an educational philosophy and its reflections on education. The data has been obtained from the study group of teachers in different fields by face to face and focus group interview. After providing validity and reliability, the data has been subjected to content analysis and the findings obtained have been transformed into themes and the created themes are given as subtitles.
