Abstract

Consultation studies has an important place in guidance services. Consultation studies are carried out by school counselors with student-related persons, such as managers, teachers and parents, to contribute to the physical, mental, emotional and social development of students. Guidance services based on cooperation are presented to planning and implementing strategies pertaining to the problem situations in the consultation process. Within the context of consultation studies, it is aimed to establish a common guiding mentality on the sides through the interaction with the student-related persons and to use the available resources in accordance with this understanding. In addition, consultation studies provide a holistic approach to understanding the needs and problems of the students in various areas. In this study addressed how school counselors can construct the consultation process, the skills they need to have and the consultation models they can use.
